Distracted

aged 15 to 20, were most likely to be involved in distracted driving crashes, reflecting both inexperience and high rates of smartphone use.

States with the lowest rates of distracted driving deaths offer a stark contrast. The District of Columbia reported zero fatalities from distracted driving in 2023.

Other low-ranking states included Nevada, North Carolina, North Dakota, and Rhode Island.

Differences in reporting requirements and enforcement strategies may partially explain these disparities.

States with stronger anti-texting laws, public awareness campaigns, and consistent enforcement tend to perform better in distracted driving prevention, according to Zutobi, a digital learning platform designed to help people prepare their drivers license test, which compiled the data from NHTSA.
