SOFTBALL: Four years after 21-3 season, too few want to play

ler were left disappointed at their lack of a senior season.

"I didn't want to end on a bad season," Oursler said. "I thought maybe things would be different."

The students offered a variety of explanations as to the lack of willing players.

Groening speculated that an individual sport might be more attractive to recruiters than a team sport, which leading many to switch to track.

This also will be long-time track coach Grant Theihoff's final year with Marion, which may be another draw.

Cliques also are important, softballers said.

"The kind of people who do volleyball and basketball tend to do track, and they want to stay with the teammates they've already known," Groening said.

There is no doubt that the 2024 season affected the team's reputation.

"Last season, with Jerry, we didn't have a very successful season," Oursler said. "I think that kind of pushed people away."

Mendoza rubbed some the wrong way in his first year as coach.

"I never really got to play much when Jerry was coaching," Oursler said. "I sat on the bench the whole season, and I was really upset about it. I tried to talk to him about it, and he kind of shut me down and told me I'm not good enough for the team."

Mendoza's prior experience came from coaching baseball, something players quickly picked up on.

"Jerry was a great coach; he just wasn't suited for softball," Voyles said. "He definitely had the mechanics to teach softball; it's just I think he went about it the wrong way last year, which led to a lot of players not playing this year."

"I had talked to about four or five different freshman girls, and they had said they would do [softball] if it wasn't Jerry coaching."

Mendoza did not respond to requests for comment.

Replacing a coach so quickly — as a few expect will happen — may present other problems.

Consistency is key in an athletic program. Groening used the example of a summer ball coach, Reann Buchanan, as one able to develop players over multiple seasons.

Working under Buchanan "was the most athletic growth I've had in softball," Groening said.

Buchanan also coached at Canton-Galva, where she similarly improved the team.

After going 0-2 (and presumably forfeiting the rest of the season) in 2021, the Eagles have posted winning records every year since.

"She brought them from the bottom up," Voyles said. "And it showed, especially last year, when everyone was like, 'you should have a chance at beating Canton.' We got rolled by them."

Marion baseball also is a program that has benefited from consistency.

Head coach Roger Schroeder has led the program for 14 years, while assistant Jordan Metro has been there about as long.

"They've got amazing coaches," Groening said. "Schroeder and Metro, they've built the program so well."

Voyles, newer to softball than Groening and Oursler, "fell in love" with the sport in 2023.

"As someone who's struggled with anger throughout the years, expressing yourself in a way that's productive and helping keep the energy up is so fun," she said.

A junior, she hopes Marion will be able to field a team in her last year as a Warrior.

Whether that happens could seriously affect her future. Voyles is hoping to get a college recruitment offer in softball.

"I had a couple different colleges lined up that wanted videos sent so they could evaluate and see if I'd have a place on their team after next year," Voyles said.

Without a varsity softball team, she will have fewer opportunities to show off her skills, although a personal coach and summer ball prevents her from feeling too worried.

Oursler has a different attitude.

She doesn't take softball too seriously; it was always just something to do for fun.

"I never grew up doing it, but as a freshman, some of the upperclassmen convinced me to," she said. "The girls on the team were super nice. It was a fun, chill environment."

Despite clashing with Mendoza in 2024, she went out for the team again this spring.

"I like to stick to things," she said.

Things change quickly in high school sports, and Marion softball exemplifies this.

It's hard to find a more dramatic decline than going from 21-3 in 2021 to 1-12 in 2024 before not having a team in 2025.

Things can improve just as fast. But for that, the team needs players.

"Give them a good understanding that softball isn't just about the game," Oursler recommended. "You can make friendships."

Willson joked that the trailer had a better kitchen than the staff had in the old restaurant.

"You had to go outside to change your mind in the old kitchen," she quipped.

That will change after the restaurant is rebuilt.

Marshall plans to double the kitchen's size and add other improvements, like a dishwasher, paint on the walls, and a more structurally sound door.

The roof also will be redesigned.

"There used to be a drop ceiling, and we're not putting that back in because it was gross anyway," Willson said. "Now we're doing an industrial look."

Marshall said her insurance did not cover as much as she'd like, and her business may have to do more fundraising in the future.

That was part of her decision to open the curbside kitchen.

"That's supposed to be providing a little bit for us," she said.

Otherwise, the rebuilding is going well, especially now that weather has warmed up.

The restaurant is trying to repay financial and material love Peabody has shown it.

It is catering the high school prom and recently was host for a free Valentine's Day dinner for the senior center.

"These are people that have been supporting us since 1978, when the place was built," Marshall said. "That was our way to say 'thank you.'"

Marshall said she was grateful for the support from the community.

"They want to see us come back," she said. "We're really nervous about it, but we're really excited about this opportunity."

"A lot of times in this business, you just hear the negative. 'The food was cold,' or 'the service was blah,' or 'it took forever to do this.' But then the second this fire happened, it's like everybody went, 'Oh, s—. They're human.'"
