Mr. Fox, partner in the Sugar Factory Co., was in town yesterday. He is pleased with Marion Centre.

Mrs. Perkins informs us that she has received a full stock of spring and summer millinery, to which she invites attention.

The Central Kansas Telegraph, the new German paper to be published in Marion Centre, will appear next week, as we learn from the editor.

Jesse Phillips inserts a card this week announcing himself ready to do stonework and to furnish stone for parties. Jesse is one of the pioneers here, and we commend him to all.

The meat market firm of Jones and Yeagley has dissolved, Mr. Yeagley retiring and Mr. Polk McMillen taking his place. The new firm has rented the room vacated by Corbett and Bown. It has been nicely fitted up for them. Success to them.

Sanford and Sons drug store has been finally removed to the elegant new Williams Building, handsomely fitted up for them in Kable and Grady's best style.

The counter and shelving are really fine. A beautiful soda fountain has been put up where lovers of this refreshing beverage may cool their tongues this summer.

The whole establishment is an ornament to the town.

Barn dance to mark site's anniversary

A presentation, reception, and old-fashioned barn dance May 3 will mark the 110th anniversary of construction and 10th anniversary of renovation of the Pioneer Bluffs ranching history barn a mile north of Matfield Green on K-177.

Architect Ben Moore and contractor Rick Mitchell will speak at 4:10 p.m. about the renovation before the premiere of a renovation video and tours of the barn and accompanying house.

Beginner dance instruction will start at 6 p.m., followed by the dance. Music will be provided by Land Band. Snacks and birthday cake will be served before the dance.

Donations will be accepted. Reservations are not required but are being accepted at (620) 753-3484 and info@pioneer-bluffs.org.

A Peabody-Burns blood drive Thursday took in 23 pints, or "units," of blood.

Blood drive response borders on anemic

By FINN HARTNETT

A blood drive Thursday at Peabody-Burns High School's gym drew a trickle of county residents.

Participants could sign up for a standard or a "Power Red" donation, which allowed for two pints (referred to as "units") of blood cells to be taken while plasma and platelets were returned to the body.

A standard donation is one unit of blood.

National Honor Society students helped promote and organize the event. Red Cross nurses were responsible for taking blood. The Red Cross provides money for Honor Society scholarships for every unit of blood donated.

"So far today, we've had kind of a poor turnout," art teacher and Honor Society advisor Heidi Hittle said. "Not like our usual ones."

The blood drive lasted from morning to early afternoon.

Students, faculty members, and senior citizens made up the majority of donors.

"People complain it's during the day and they work," Hittle said. "But to have my kids come back at nighttime, after they've been in school all day, and after I've worked all day, that's one of those hard things, too."

The blood drive pulled in 23 units, passing the school's goal of 20. Hittle had hoped to reach the maximum of 36 units and earn the top amount of scholarship money.

"There's definitely a generational rift," a Red Cross nurse who requested anonymity said. "A lot of older people donate. Part of that is because they're retired and they have time to. Most of our drives are during the work week. But it seems like younger people aren't really inclined to do it as much. I think the Red Cross needs to do better marketing."

The next blood drive planned at the high school is July 15.

Hillsboro police now doing VIN checks

By PHYLLIS ZORN

Staff writer

At one time, Marion's police department was the only place in the county to get a vehicle identification check on a car.

Now, Hillsboro police are doing VIN inspections, as well.

VIN inspection is required when a vehicle has a title from a different state or foreign country, when it has been rebuilt or restored from one or more vehicles, or when proper identification is in doubt.

Marion interim police chief Zach Hudlin said police departments do VIN checks only for out-of-state titles. If the VIN number is in question or the car has been rebuilt, police refer the owner to Kansas Highway Patrol.

Usually a trooper arrives promptly when needed, Hudlin said.

Hillsboro Police Chief Jessey Hiebert said the department started doing VIN checks March 10 after repeated requests from Hillsboro car dealers, who previously had to have a Marion officer come to Hillsboro to do the checks.

Heibert said officers took a highway patrol VIN inspection course before they began doing inspections.

Officers check whether the vehicle has been reported stolen and look for any sign that the identification number has been altered.

Hillsboro police department charges $20 for a VIN inspection. Of that, $2 is sent to Kansas Highway Patrol, and $18 remains with the police department. Hudlin said the business of VIN checks in Marion had remained steady, with only dealership VIN checks falling off for Marion police.
