The Allergen Sesame Now Required on Food Labels

CINDY WILLIAMS

District Extension Agent, Food, Nutrition, Health and Safety

As of January 1, 2023, food products that contain sesame must have sesame listed as an allergen. The Food Allergy Safety, Treatment, Education, and Research (FASTER) Act passed in 2021 declared that sesame be designated as the ninth major food allergen. This is the first addition to the initial eight food allergens defined in 2004.

The allergen declaration will be stated within the ingredient statement or as a separate "Contains" statement below the ingredient statement on food packages.

There may still be food products in grocery stores that don't list sesame as an allergen if they were already made and shipped to stores before 2023. So those who are allergic to sesame will need to check the ingredient statement regularly. Also, foods that are not packaged, such as bakery goods displayed on trays, may or may not have allergen information. Always ask the vendor to find out any food allergen information.

When an Ingredient Statement Says "Spice"

Reading ingredient statements on food packages provides you a list of ingredients in the food from most to least in the formula. So, when you read the word "spice" or "spices" what does that mean?

According to the FDA Code of Federal Regulations, certain spices can be listed by their common or usual name or declared collectively without naming each spice. A spice is defined as an aromatic vegetable substance in the whole, broken or ground form. Examples include allspice, basil, dill seed, black pepper and others. The exception is a substance traditionally used as a food, such as onions, garlic or celery. These cannot be included as a spice. Spices such as paprika, turmeric, and saffron are also colors and must be declared as "spice and coloring" or by their common name.
