Leavenworth City Manager Scott Peterson said the dispute concerns a land use issue and the city's right to govern development.

"This is not a statement on the current administration," he said. "It is not a statement on immigration at all. This is entirely about the city's ability to govern through the special use permit process.'

As part of the ongoing court case, CoreCivic officials have agreed not to house any detainees in Leavenworth before June 1.

According to the news release from Gustin, CoreCivic has committed to pay a one-time impact fee of $1 million to the city and an annual $250,000 impact fee payment as well as $150,000 each year to the Leavenworth Police Department.

Misty Mackey, who has been picked to serve as warden of of the Midwest Regional Reception Center, said in the news release that CoreCivic officials are "looking forward to operating a safe, transparent, accountable facility that will be a positive for this community dedicated to public guiding principals of your analysis as they come forward."

Commission Chairman Mike Smith said it was important for the commission to have a policy in place immediately. He suggested the commission was on a time crunch.

He said the policy can be adjusted in the future.

"I think we need to get something started," he said. The policy passed unanimously.

Also Wednesday, commissioners approved a resolution to alter the boundaries of Leavenworth County Fire District No. 1 to exclude the city of Lansing.

For now, the fire district still includes Delaware and High Prairie townships. But Brown said commissioners will be presented with similar resolutions during the next two weeks to alter the boundaries to also exclude the two townships.

Fire District No. 1 was formed in 2003 and has comprised the city of Lansing and High Prairie and Delaware townships.

The district previously operated a fire department. But those operations ceased at the end of 2024 with the termination of an interlocal agreement.

A new Lansing Fire Department now provides fire protection services for the city and Delaware Township. A new High Prairie Township Fire Department now provides services for that township.

The County Commission is now in the process of altering the fire district's boundaries to remove each of the three entities that made up the district.
