CoreCivic

prohibited the U.S. Department of Justice from renewing contracts with privately-run detention facilities. The Marshals Service is an agency of the Justice Department.

After entering office in January, President Donald Trump signed an executive order that rescinded the prohibition on the federal government's use of privately-operated detention facilities.

CoreCivic's Leavenworth facility previously had a grandfathered status because it was already being used as a detention center when the requirement for a special use permit was added to the city development regulations in 2012.

City officials argue the facility lost its grandfathered status after it stopped housing detainees for the Marshals Service because it went for more than one year without being used as a detention center.

CoreCivic officials argue the facility maintains its grandfathered status because it was never abandoned by the company. Staff have continued to work in the facility, and company officials worked to negotiate a contract with a new customer.

Attorneys for the city initially filed a lawsuit against CoreCivic in federal court. But that case was dismissed last month when a judge ruled the city had not demonstrated that the case could be heard in federal court.

The current case is being heard in Leavenworth County District Court, which is part of the state court system.

The lawsuit asks Bryant to make a declaratory judgement that CoreCivic must obtain a special use permit before housing inmates at the Leavenworth facility.

In addition to the temporary restraining order, the city is seeking a preliminary injunction and a permanent injunction against CoreCivic.

Students eligible for deportation protections caught in immigration crackdown

Wire report

Ximena Arias-Cristobal knows the risks that can come with driving as a person living in the U.S. without legal authorization, where a simple traffic stop could lead to being deported.

That fear materialized last month when she was pulled over by local police in Dalton, Georgia, for making an improper turn at a red light, but instead of a traffic ticket, the 19-yearold was detained at Stewart Detention Center for nearly three weeks, she said at a virtual event Tuesday.

"Even though my time there was short ... the emotional weight is overwhelming," Arias-Cristobal said during a panel conversation organized by advocacy groups opposing the Trump administration's immigration crackdown on students without legal authorization and international students.

"This isn't just an immigration issue, it's a human rights issue," Arias-Cristobal said.

She and her parents

THURSDAY EVENING

arrived in the United States applications in 2021 as without legal authorization from Mexico when Arias-Cristobal was 4 years old. Her father was in the car with her last month and was also detained at the Stewart Detention Center, she said. He has since been released.

"What affected me the most was the transfer itself, being shackled at the waist and ankles," Arias-Cristobal said of being transferred by Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents to Stewart Detention Center.

Arias-Cristobal is eligible to apply for deportation protections under the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals, or DACA, policy. DACA allows some people who were brought into the country as children without legal authorization to obtain a drivers license and work permits and remain in the country, under certain conditions.

But the agency that issues such protections, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, stopped accepting part of a court case from Republican state officials challenging DACA's legality.

The case remains pending and is likely to head to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Arias-Cristobal now faces deportation to Mexico as she tries to complete her higher education at Dalton State College, where she is studying economics and finance.

Gaby Pacheco, president and CEO of advocacy group TheDream.US, said that cases like Arias-Cristobal's are becoming more common under the second Trump administration and that "Dreamers are under attack."

Pachecos' group provides scholarships to young immigrants without legal status, including Arias-Cristobal, to pursue higher education.

She said that while DACA recipients have not been caught in deportations, "we have heard of people (being) held and questioned" by ICE agents.

"The level of cruelty, inhumanity and lawlessness that we're seeing from the Department of Homeland Security... is completely alarming," Pacheco said.

That type of immigration enforcement has impacted higher education, said Miriam Feldblum, the president of the Presidents' Alliance on Higher Education and Immigration, which advocates for international students and students without proper legal authority to attend college.

The Department of Homeland Security informed Harvard University last month that it was revoking the Ivy League school's ability to accept international students. A federal court has temporarily blocked the move while the case is pending.

"This will directly harm our enrollment at U.S. institutions," she said of the Trump administration's stance on limiting how many international students can attend higher education.

Feldblum said that because international students pay full tuition, those costs often subsidize scholarships for U.S. students.
