This Week in Plant Problems

By Rita Brhel
Adams County Nebraska
Extension

Q: I have a sad-looking Mugo pine that I'm hoping will perk up if I fertilize it. When's the best time to start this with my Mugo?

A: The recommendation is not to start fertilizing your Mugo pine, but to instead consult your local Nebraska Extension horticulture professional for a full assessment. Nebraska Extension does not recommend fertilizing trees except in rare circumstances as indicated by a soil test and only the missing soil nutrient should be applied at the specified rate. Fertilizing newly planted trees can actually slow root growth, which can harm the tree's long-term health. Newly planted trees that receive too much fertilizer can also grow too rapidly, resulting in weak structure in the canopy that may not be able to be corrected by pruning. Unnecessarily fertilizing established trees can cause root burn, soil health imbalance and increased injury to drought-stressed trees.

After the dry, mild winter we experienced with no snow cover, we should consider all of our landscape plants to be drought-stressed! Furthermore, when plants don't need fertilizer, the extra fertilizer washes through the soil to contaminate our drinking water supply. Mugo pines, especially, are unlikely to need fertilizer as they burn easily and are adapted to low-nutrient soil. That's not to say that your Mugo pine doesn't need some help, but talk to a Nebraska Extension horticulture professional first.

Once you face your fear, nothing is ever as hard as you think. — Olivia Newton-John
