

FIRST AID:

FROM PAGE B2

Heartland and Bourbon Viruses, Alpha-gal Syndrome and Lyme Disease.

Symptoms of any of the above include, but are not limited to: fever, chills, muscle pain, headaches, fatigue, itchiness, nausea and vomiting, swollen lymph nodes, allergic reactions to eating red meat and rashes.

Tick bites are often found on your scalp or neck, in your groin area, behind your knees, in or around your ears, in your armpits, around your waistline, and your belly button.

If you have a tick bite, clean the bite area with soap and water. If the tick is still attached, you should use rounded-ended tweezers to carefully pinch the tick near its head, as close to your skin as possible. Do not crush the tick. Take notes or a photo of the tick, and or save the tick in an airtight container to show a medical provider if any of the above symptoms happen. If your doctor is worried about a tick-borne disease, they may take a sample of your blood to eliminate or confirm a diagnosis.

Tick bite prevention

Avoid tall grass and wooded areas. In the woods, stay on trails or paths whenever possible.

Use bug repellent.

Keep your skin covered.

Check yourself for ticks, and/or have someone help you check your back and your scalp.

Check your pets for ticks as well.

So, as you go outside more often this spring, keep aware of your surroundings, and remember the proper precautions to avoid bites and stings.

Information on first aid protocols are from the First Aid/CPR/AED Participants Manual, provided by the American Red Cross training services 2021.
