worse,” Pulisic said. “I was pushing, and I was really close to trying to be available for the last game, for sure. I did feel a little something (against Paraguay), but I definitely was able to push through in the first half and just get me through. But yeah, it wasn’t quite ready, but it wasn’t anything where I feared anything worse than what it was.”

With no stakes for the U.S. against Turkey, Pochettino seems likely to provide some rest to key players in his starting lineup while giving a few of his reserves possibly their only opportunity to hit the field. That sounds great to starting central defender Chris Richards, who thinks some time off wouldn’t be a hindrance.

“Our trainings are pretty intense,” Richards said. “I think fitness won’t be an issue. I don’t think sharpness will be, either. Obviously it’s good to keep into some sort of rhythm, but I think these guys deserve it if they get the chance (Thursday). I think we’ll be fine when it comes to the next game.”

Pulisic was visibly excited as a spectator during the Americans’ win in Seattle, celebrating along with his teammates as they capably handled a second straight opponent for their team’s first consecutive World Cup victories since 1930. The U.S. offensive performance without its most accomplished attacking player, particularly in the first half against Australia, pleased Pulisic greatly.

NBA draft on Tuesday night.

“I want to show that burst that I’ve gotten back to after the season,” Peterson said. “I feel better than I ever have.”

Peterson, who is reserved off the court, declined to visit and work out in Utah during the pre-draft period and his camp openly lobbied for him to be the No. 1 pick.

But the Jazz flew to Peterson’s hometown to interview him over the weekend to judge his level of commitment. Peterson even paused a tattooing session on his biceps to chat with Utah’s front office, including President of Basketball Operations Austin Ainge and Ainge’s father and Jazz CEO, Danny.

“We talked about our team and our program, and how he would fit, and he shared how excited he would be to be with us if it went that way on draft night,” Austin Ainge said.

Peterson is a smooth but explosive player with a 6-foot-10 wingspan, above-average for a guard his size, who is skilled offensively and defensively. Still just 19 years old, he’s always been a natural scorer with rare athleticism and court savvy.

“One thing that showed up a lot was just his work ethic and his confidence, his kind of quiet confidence. He’s not scared of the moment,” Ainge said.

A consensus five-star recruit out of high school, Peterson averaged 20.2 points in 24 games during his lone college season.

The questions about him centered on availability. He dealt with a preseason full-body cramping issue requiring hospitalization, then missed 11 games for injury or illness. He frequently had limited minutes for uncertainty with his day-to-day status.

“Our doctors went through everything from the combine and all the tests that were ordered and we feel very comfortable. He’s ready to hit the ground running and we plan on seeing him in summer league,” Ainge said.

Kansas coach Bill Self sees big things in store for Peterson.

“His ceiling is, in 10 years, he’s an eight-time All-Star,” Self said. “It may take him a year or two to get his legs under him, but he’ll be one of the best guards in the league. He’ll be one of the most talked about. He’ll be a guy that averages 20, 25 a game, I think, over the course of his career.”

The Jazz want to see that talent right away. “Darryn fits all the plays in the playbook. He is a well-rounded player and there really isn’t anything that he can’t do,” Ainge said.

The Jazz haven’t drafted so high since choosing Darrell Griffith at No. 2 in 1980 despite many years of finishing near the bottom of the NBA standings during their rebuild.

Some Jazz fans hoped Utah might take AJ Dybantsa — the No. 1 pick by Washington on Tuesday night — since he played part of his high school basketball in the state and starred at Brigham Young, but a watch party in Utah featured Jazz fans exulting in the Peterson pick. Jazz officials showed Peterson the clip and he couldn’t help but smile.

“I’m someone that’s going to go out there and do everything to help a team win,” Peterson said. “Hopefully, I can help Utah get deep into the playoffs.”

Thursday and Friday.

Forrest, a native of Johnstown, Pa., made history during his freshman season at OSU. He graduated early from high school and then joined the OSU wrestling team in January. Forrest wrestled his first college match on Jan. 11.

Wrestling at 133 pounds, Forrest won all 19 matches and his 5-2 decision against Ohio State sophomore Ben Davino earned Forrest a national championship. He became the first to be a high school graduate in December and then win a collegiate national championship in March.

Forrest was in the position of being a wrestling camp participant himself not that long ago.

“It depends on my schedule,” Forrest said. “I like to try and do it as much as I can. It depends on how far I am traveling, what I am doing, all that stuff.”

“It’s really cool, especially when they want to be there and want to work hard and want to ask questions. I’ve heard some really cool stories about kids watching me wrestle and that’s what it’s all about, being an influence and kids telling me like how much my wrestling impacts them and their lives. It’s special.”

Forrest hopes to benefit from teaching the sport of wrestling to campers like the ones at Black Diamond.

“I think it helps me a lot,” Forrest said. “It gives me perspective that what I am doing is working and it’s more mental than anything. It makes me feel good and makes me want to keep wrestling and to keep getting better at these camps. Just keep giving back and being a good role model and influence for these kids.

“This is my first year (at Black Diamond). I’ve heard great things from my coaches and then my first time, it’s really big and really cool. There’s so many kids and I haven’t seen anything like this in my life before.”
