Walk Kansas adds spring webinars to expand wellness focus

The popular Walk Kansas program is adding four spring webinars to give participants a deeper dive into wellness topics ranging from physical activity at work to gut health and kindness on the job.

Sharolyn Jackson, a Kansas State University family and consumer sciences specialist and coordinator of Walk Kansas, said the educational component reflects the program's continued evolution in its 26th year.

"We've added such an educational component to Walk Kansas over the last 5-10 years," Jackson said. "I'm a believer that if people know the 'why' behind what we say, that's going to stick with them more. We're not just saying things. There's a basis, there's a research backing for all of this information that we provide."

Registration for the eight-week health challenge opened March 1. The program runs March 22 through May 16 and is open to individuals and teams in Kansas and beyond. More information and registration details are available at walkkansas.org.

The $10 registration fee includes access to an online tracking system, a weekly newsletter, nutrition tips and recipes, and the four webinars, all scheduled during the noon hour on Wednesdays. The virtual room opens at noon, with presentations beginning about 12:10 p.m. and concluding about 10 minutes before 1 p.m.
